Receipts of Live Stock at the Union Stock Yards during the past 24 hours-505 Cattle, 589 Hogs. Shipments-587 Cattle, 238 Hogs.

The receipts of native cattle at the yards today were light and there was not much doing in the cattle alleys. There was a strong demand for yearling steers and many more of them could have been sold at good prices. There were quite a num-ber of Texas cattle forwarded in first hands. Good stockers and feeders sold readily, at yesterday's figures.

The run of hogs was fair. The market opened 24 05 cents lower than yesterday, closing strong and 5 cents lower. Price en light hogs and pigs declined more than on mediums and heavies. The packers were the heaviest buyers again today, pay ing the best prices. Top hogs sold at $3.93% today; bulk at $3.85.

THE UNLUCKY STONE.

From my earliest recollection we had traveled, traveled the world over, it eemed, my mother and L We had no kith nor kin but one another, so can the world wonder that we were all in all to each other? My mother's face, although the sweetest and gentlest of faces, was always sad, even gloomy at times. She always were the deepest of mourning for my father, although I could never get her to mention him. And after several inquiries I ceased to trouble her, for such a look of pain and agony would come over the dear features at the meution of Robert Radeliff. The only jewelry she ever wore consisted of two rings, a plain gold wedding ring and a beautiful opal set in a heavy band of gold. Through Asia, Europe, America, and even to Africa and Australia, we had made our way. And whenever in a crowd or conversing with a stranger I would notice my mother looking at her opal ring, which she wore on the third finger of the right hand. One summer we had wandered through Russia, had spent some time on the Rhine, and finally brought up in a little town among the mountains of Switzerland. Here my nother was taken ill with a general decline of the heart, as the village doctor called it. I was very much frightened and wanted to tele graph for a celebrated man from Paris. but she said: "No, Carl, do nothing whatsoever. My time has come, and I must have you to myself for the few hours left me."

from me. "Mother," I said, controlling my emotions for fear of making her worse, "you imagine that you are much worse than I have seen you for some time. Your cheeks are bright red." Ah, what a fool I was! Death's very sign I took to be the hue of returning "Carl, I have no time to waste in useless words," she said. "Come and sit by my side and learn why your mother's sad face has darkened your young life. No, do not interrupt, my boy. I know how much you think of your mother. Sixteen years ago, when you were a child of 4, we lived in a beautiful country home in the north of Ireland. Your father was of that country, you know. I did not know, for she had never told me anything about him; but I did not interrupt, and she continued: "Well, one night I waited and waited for Robert to return. He had gone to the neighboring village to buy new carriage horses. The wind blew a gale, and the rain fell in torrents. I walked the floor in an agony of fear till 12 o'clock, then called a faithful old servant and told him to harness and to go with me to look for his master. He thought me crazy, but did as I told him. Put another pillow under my head, Carl. There, now I can

"We found him, my son; found him all bloody and beaten to death. Foully murdered." Her face was ghastly, and although shaking in every limb I managed to give her some drops the doctor had left so that she was able to continue. "I cannot tell you more of that dreadful time except that there never was the slightest clew to the assassin. We never knew that he had an enemy in the world. It was not robbery, for his watch and a large amount of money were not touched. You will find papers telling you all of that. My part is what I wish to tell you now. I lived with you alone in the old home for one year. One night I fell asleep in a chair by the hearth, and had the strangest of dreams. I dreamt

a voice said to me: " 'Take thy child and the opal ring and travel the world over, and when thou dost find thy opal turnest a blood red then thou willst be in the presence of thine enemy and thine husband's

"When I awoke I pondered on it for a while, but came to the conclusion that it was the result of a fevered brain. The next night I had the same dream, and again the next. I then took it as my nission in life to find the man who had foully killed my Robert. I awoke from my apathy, sold the place, and taking you with me started on my pilgrimage. You know the result. Never has my ring changed color. Now, Carl, I am dying, and into your hands I consign this ring, and I ask you by the memory of your murdered father to find the person and bring his crime home to him." Saying this she placed the opal, with ts fine red lines, upon my finger, and then lay back exhausted. "I promise, mother, never to give up the search while there is breath in my body," I said, intending to find the assassin by modern means instead of superstitions, but I would not pain her by loubting her dream. Three days she lingered, during which time she told me of her financial standing, and that she did not know of a relative in the world. The third night she inseed away, leaving me alone in the world with a terrible void in my life and an unutterable grief. I saw her buried in the little Swiss burial ground, Night express for Kansas City, St. Louis and the east leaves Wichita at 9:40 p.m. Chair cars and Pullman sleepers on this train. Missouri Pacific railway. 107 tf no friends and a veritable vendetta. A week later I started for Paris, stated my week later I started for Paris, stated my trouble, and had the best detectives to work up a hopeless case. I made several pleasan. traveling acquaintances, and had a neur ber of invitations to visit in Washingon, Baltimore and other cities in the States. I refused them all, and went west to San Francisco, staying there until Jan. 1, when I returned to Washington, where I ran across one of my travling friends, Ray Carrington.

I refused all overtures to go into society or to visit Carrington, but when I was taken ill and threatened with nueumonia my friend had me removed, against my wishes, to his home, where a tall, stately lady smiled graciously upon me, and where I had all the care disti and devotion possible during a serious iliness. This lady, who was Ray's mother, was an angel of mercy to me, homeless wanderer. One day I was ly ing on the sofa deluged with shawls, wraps, etc., reading my correspondence from the foreign police offices. Nothing had really been done, although a man had been sent to Ireland. So many years had passed they could hold out little hope to me.

A rap at the door, and "May I come in?" from Ray. "Of course," I replied. "Why do you

"Because I have brought you a visitor," he said, as he entered with his arm around a beautiful young girl, whom he introduced as his sister Lilian.

I told her she was very kind to visit an invalid, and wondered what they would think if they knew I was hunting down a murderer of sixteen years ago. Many happy days passed in spite of illness and vendettas. They insisted upon keeping me for a ball in honor of Lilian's twentieth birthday. I found resistance useless, so yielded with as good grace as possible, although I knew such gayeties were not for me, and my mother's death was too recent not to destroy any desire for such pleasures.

However I staid, and on the evening of the ball arrayed myself in my dress suit and descended to the ballroom, which was beautifully decorated with tropical plants and lovely ferns. Lilian was receiving her guests by her mother's side. She was dressed in a gown of silvery fabric, which made her look more than ever like the beautiful fairy she was. I easily mingled unnoticed in the crowd.

As I gazed on that brilliant scene I wondered what the dear mother was thinking as she locked down from her home on high. I thought of the little grave in the far away country, of the vendetta left me as a legacy. Ray broke in upon my meditations, and finding it impossible to persuade me to dance said: "Well, do take Miss Van Dyke into supper and relieve me."

I complied, and upon entering the supper room removed one glove, as my hand was warm. Upon doing so I glanced at the opal ring, and to my horror noticed that it had become a blood red. What could it mean? I glanced around the room and noticed only a dozen people, but these brilliant society people of Washington. What had they to do with my opal turning red? I must be mistaken. No; it was a deep blood red. I noticed Ray's uncle among the crowd-a tall, dark man, conversing with a lady; and I mechanically watched him leave the room, then glanced at my ring and, great heavens! my blood seemed turning to ice, for the ring had resumed its original color. I escorted Miss Van Dyke back to the ballroom and delivered her to a partner. Then I sought an introduction to Ray's uncle. "Mr. Radcliff," he exclaimed, and I saw him start, "where was your home, if I may ask?" "In the north of Ireland," I replied, "and my father was Robert Radeliff." I noticed my ring had again become red, which fact dispelled all doubt from my mind. Notwithstanding how ridiculous it seemed, I continued, "Mr. Carrington, I would like a few words with you privately."

"Not to-night," he stammered, "but to-morrow at 10 a. m." "Very well," I replied, and then tought the smoking room to be able to think. Lilian's uncle. She to whom my heart had gone out was the niece of the murderer of my father, for I had faith that I had found the man. I retired that night to get little or no sleep, to wonder what I should say and do to Howard Carrington, and what motive he could have had for such a deed. The next morning I called at his residence promptly at 10 o'clock, and was told that the gentleman was not yet up, had not answered when he was called and must be very tired. A horrible suspicion came over me, and I told the man to come with me, for we must break in the door. We easily did so, and there, with his head on his arm, leaning on his desk, was Carrington. Then to our horror we saw a stream of blood on the floor and a revolver near it. We went to him and found him dead. The bullet had done its deadly work. On the desk lay an envelope addressed to Carl R. Radcliff. I opened it and read: "Mr. Radcliff-You have tracked me at last. How I cannot imagine, for I never supposed there was a single clew. Now I know my time has come. I am tired of being bounded by remorse, and should have made way with myself before long anyway. I killed your father nearly seventeen years ago in Ireland. I CANVASSEES WANTED AT THE SINGER nearly seventeen years ago in Ireland. I sewing Machine office. Literal inducements had fallen passionately in love with your mother long before she knew of your father. She rejected me with scorn because I drank. When she married Radcliff I was wild with jealousy. Still I never should have done him harm if it hadn't been for meeting him that dark night all alone. I was mad with drink, and the deed was done before I realized the crime. I have never since touched a drop of liquor. No one suspected Mr.

Carrington, the tourist, of such a deed, and after some time I came here to my friends. Now you know all-H. C." I never told my friends of this letter or of the crime. They thought it temporary insanity. I now felt free to offer myself to Lilian, and to my joy and astonishment was accepted. Eighteen months from the time of her uncle's death Lilian became my wife. I have always worn the opal ring, which has never changed its color since it showed me my father's murderer.-L. M. A. in Boston Globs.
